What makes tutoring work, and how to choose a program built into the school day.

WHAT HIGH-DOSAGE TUTORING IS

Frequent sessions, several times a week, in small groups, with a consistent tutor, usually during the school day. That's what separates it from occasional homework help or drop-in tutoring.

The challenge, and how Fullmind solves it

The challenge	With Fullmind
❗ Not enough tutors with the right training.	✅ Certified tutors at the scale your district needs.
❗ Frequent sessions are hard to schedule around the school day.	✅ Sessions built into the school day, several times a week.
❗ Students see a different tutor each time.	✅ Small groups with the same tutor all year.
❗ Tutoring drifts from what's taught in class.	✅ Aligned to your curriculum and assessments.
❗ No clear view of whether it's working.	✅ Regular progress data.

Why it matters A consistent tutoring plan gives students focused support while helping your team make informed intervention decisions.

5 questions to ask any provider

- 1 How often do students meet, and in what group size?
- 2 Do students keep the same tutor?
- 3 Are tutors certified teachers?
- 4 How is tutoring aligned to our curriculum?
- 5 What progress data will we receive?

How to fund it

Commonly Title I, Part A. Many states also fund tutoring programs directly. Check allowable uses with your federal programs coordinator.
